Supreme Court Day Problem

Barbara Smith was an employee of Urbandale Creamery, Inc. On September 30, 1995, she arrived early for work and went into the women's locker room to change into her work clothing. While changing her clothing, she heard the door open in the adjacent men's locker room and then noticed a mirror being inserted into an opening in the wall next to piping or vents between the men's and women's locker rooms. She went to the men's locker room and confronted Elroy Kirkwood, who was alone in the adjoining men's locker room. It was later established that he possessed or had access to a telescoping mirror. Mr. Kirkwood was Ms. Smith's supervisor at the creamery, but was not scheduled to work on that particular day.

On the evening before this incident, Ms. Smith had received a telephone call from a friend telling her that Mr. Kirkwood apparently was peeking into the women's locker room. Managers at Urbandale Creamery had been informed that Mr. Kirkwood was acting "suspiciously" in the men's locker room. Although no one had actually observed him "peeping" with the mirror into the women's locker room, the evidence suggests that Mr. Kirkwood may have viewed Ms. Smith on more than one occasion while she was changing her clothes.

Barbara Smith brought this tort action against Urbandale Creamery, Inc., alleging (1) that the creamery negligently failed to repair a hole near a vent or heat pipe that allowed visual access between the men's and women's locker rooms, and (2) that the creamery, through its agents and managers, intentionally inflicted emotional distress upon her. Ms. Smith claims to suffer from psychological problems, including depression, nervousness, anxiety, embarrassment, and mistrust of others.

Urbandale Creamery moved for summary judgment on two grounds, arguing that it is not liable for the common-law claims of negligence and intentional infliction of emotional distress. First, the creamery contends that the workers' compensation statute provides the exclusive remedy for work-related injuries during the course of employment. It argues that Ms. Smith's alleged injury was causally related to her employment because, but for the working relationship, she would not have been exposed to Mr. Kirkwood's misconduct. The course of employment, the creamery argues, includes preparatory or incidental acts by the employee on the premises, such as changing clothes for work. Second, the creamery contends that its failure to repair the hole in the wall was not intentional and does not rise to the level of "outrageousness" necessary for a claim of intentional infliction of emotional distress. Moreover, any outrageous conduct was that of Mr. Kirkwood in going to significant effort to look through the hole, not that of the creamery.

Ms. Smith opposed the motion for summary judgment, arguing that her injury did not arise out of her employment given that she was merely changing clothes in preparation for work, was not yet on duty, and that Mr. Kirkwood had come into the creamery on his day off for the personal and non-work-related purpose of observing her. Moreover, she contends that the workers' compensation statute does not provide an adequate remedy for willful actions directed at an employee for personal reasons. In any event, the workers' compensation statute is not exclusive when an employee is the victim of an intentional tort by the employer. Ms. Smith also asserts that the creamery's failure to repair the hole in the wall between the locker rooms, especially when it had reason to believe that a voyeur was taking advantage of the opening, was reckless or intentional and rose to the level of outrageous conduct.

On March 18, 1998, the district court granted Urbandale Creamery's motion for summary judgment. Ms. Smith then sought review in the Supreme Court of the State of Iowa.
